

rational economic thinking

foundations of economics

rational economic thinking

- rational economic thinking is the assumption that economists make that consumers will seek to maximize their utility and producers will seek to maximize their profits
- this also could be stated as follows...it means that people will make the choices that, at the time and with the information that they have at their disposal, will give them the greatest amount of satisfaction